COVID-19 UPDATE (05/26/20):

- 28 states – more than half of the country – have decided not to extend their stay-at-home orders. Because all of these states remain in either Phase 1 or 2 of their respective recovery plans, all residents are still urged to limit non-essential travel, practice social distancing, and take any necessary safety precautions.

- 6 states have rescinded stay-at-home orders on the county level, with the criteria for reopening based on local health status. These states are Maryland, New York, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and Wisconsin.

- 6 states have also lifted their stay-at-home orders, but have specifically instructed vulnerable populations (the elderly, the immunocompromised, those at high-risk of being exposed to COVID-19) to remain at home. These states are Alabama, Colorado, Georgia, Idaho, Mississippi, and Vermont.

- 7 states have somewhat modified their stay-at-home policies to account for the reopening of some businesses. Residents of these states are still urged to stay at home – traveling is only authorized when visiting essential businesses or businesses that have been authorized to resume, depending on the state’s recovery phases. These states are California, Hawaii, Michigan, New Jersey, New Mexico, Oregon, and Washington.

- The remaining 3 states (Delaware, Illinois, New Hampshire) still have active stay-at-home orders.
