COVID-19 UPDATE (06/02/20):
As of June 02, every single state has either modified or withdrawn their stay-at-home orders. Here’s the breakdown:

- 36 states have decided to let their orders expire indefinitely. Because most of them are still in Phase 1 or Phase 2 of reopening, all residents are still recommended to limit non-essential travel, practice social distancing, and take any necessary safety precautions.

- 5 states have rescinded stay-at-home orders on the county/city level, with the criteria for reopening based on local health status. These states are Maryland, New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and most recently Illinois.

- Georgia is the only state to have specifically instructed only vulnerable populations (the elderly, the immunocompromised, those at high-risk of being exposed to COVID-19) to remain at home.

- 8 states have somewhat modified their stay-at-home policies to account for the reopening of some businesses. Residents of these states are still urged to stay at home – traveling is only authorized when visiting essential businesses or businesses that have been authorized to resume, depending on the state’s recovery phases. These states are California, Colorado, Hawaii, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Oregon, Vermont, and Washington.
